

Gender Pokey: a companion to the Gender Gumby, which is a great wading pool to unlearn the idea that sex and gender identity and gender expression and sexual orientation are simple polar states. This is the end of the pool with diving boards.

IDENTITY SQUARE

What is your gender identity? Mark anywhere relevant with a dot, circle, star, sticker, or whatever else you feel like. Make bigger marks for whatever you identify as more frequently and smaller marks for whatever you identify as less frequently, or don't. Label your marks appropriately, or if preferred, inappropriately. Replace the four corner labels as needed. Use any color, or if preferred, all of the colors. When complete, cut out and fold into either a fortune teller or a cootie catcher, but not both.

EXPRESSION TUNNEL

What is your gender expression? As above, mark and label and revise as relevant in any way you feel like to express your expression across multiple dimensions. Make an alternate version needed for your secret superhero/villain alter ego. Place a chip on the Free Squares found at each end of the tunnel. When complete, yell BINGO and do an interpretive dance illustrating your results. Cheating is expected, passing is complicated, failing is impossible.

Sex is not included in this pokey, but the back is a DIY adventure (may also be used for cookie recipes, maps of the universe, etcetera).
